

Cycles of Change

Man has altered this landscape many times, in many ways. It's still changing: new management techniques mean more places for wildlife to live - and more opportunities for us to enjoy it, too!

Planting hope for the future

The wooded slopes of Coed Craig is being replaced by wildlife-rich forest that covered the slopes for commercial purposes as well as leisure and hunting: now, the conifer was replaced by woodlands managed over the centuries. Ancient woodland Ruperra have seen many changes

Care for Ruperra

Whilst you enjoy this beautiful place, please help us to care for it by:

- Sticking to the paths
- Keeping your dog under control
- Taking your litter home
- Not picking wild flowers
- Not lighting fires

Thank you!

COED CRAIG RUPERRA

“A pleasant place I was at today under mantles of the worthy green hazel”

So wrote one of Wales' greatest poets, Dafydd ap Gwilym, in the 14th Century. He had links with this place, and could almost have been describing the beautiful woodland scenery here.

Today, you can enjoy the same scenery, much changed over the centuries as people have adapted it to the needs of their times. By enjoying it responsibly, you can help Ruperra Conservation Trust keep this as a sanctuary for people and wildlife alike.

As well as native woodland, heathland and grasslands are being created to help other species of wildlife thrive.

Ancient woodland once covered these slopes. Now, new planting of native trees is helping to restore the wildlife value.

Lesser and Greater Horseshoe bats roost nearby and forage in the woodlands at dusk.

Iron Age hillfort (200BC)
In the Iron Age, a mighty fort crowned the hilltop, dominating the landscape for miles around.

The Motte (1200)
A motte and bailey castle was later built on the site of the hillfort, probably by the Normans. The motte is still evident; it is the prominent mound on the summit of the hill.

Summerhouse (1700)
We know from archaeological remains that people lived on the motte and made the most of the views in mediaeval times. Mention is made of Cadwgan in the 15th century "who built and died in the tower long called after him at Rhiwperra". From an Estate map we know that in the later 17th century a two storey stone summerhouse was built there. Finally, at the beginning of the 20th century, there was a split log, thatched summerhouse there, which people living today can remember.

Wild daffodils provide a glorious display in springtime.

A volunteer team from the British Trust for Ornithology are recording the birds which use the site, including Tree Pipits which are becoming increasingly rare.

The remains of the lower summerhouse, at the foot of the hill, have been strengthened and conserved.
